1 Tick the adjectives that can be used to describe plays, books and films.

Tick all of them apart from 'freezing'

2 Write down the name of a book you've read or a play or film you've seen for each definition

Read the adjectives and definitions with the students; focus on strong pronunciation. Ask random students if they can give you an example of an interesting book they've read or a boring film they've seen for example. Then ask students to work individually to complete exercise 2.

3 Complete the newspaper cuttings for the opening night of Hamlet.

- a. classic
- b. boring
- c. fashionable
- d. contemporary
- e. interesting
- f. outdated

5 Present your review to the rest of the class

Bring students up to the front in groups of six. Set an online timer with a one minute countdown so that the next student starts as soon as the previous one stops talking. This means that you won't waste time between presentations and even with a large class you should get through them all.
